NOW IS TIME TO HATCH CHICKS

March the Best Month to Hatch to Insure Winter Layers.

March is in many respects the most interesting and most critical month for the poultry keeper. At this time the baby chicks begin to appear and the success of the year depends upon the success in getting the chicks started right.

The chief reason for hatching chicks at all is to reproduce the laying flock. The profits in the poultry business come from egg production, and few people could afford to raise chickens for meat alone. For profitable egg production, pullets must be hatched early. March is the best month for hatching the common breeds in Missouri to insure profitable winter layers.

Incubators and setting hens should be run at capacity during this month so as to insure a large per cent of early hatched pullets. Co-operators are urged to decide how many pullets will be required to bring the flock up to the desired size for next winter and to hatch only enough chicks to insure the proper number of pullets being raised.

TROUBLE AT ARKANSAS U.

Students Ask President J. C. Futrell to Resign.

The University of Arkansas was in an uproar the other day, following request of the student body that President John C. Futrell resign.

The action was taken at a mass meeting called by the president of the student council. The vote was 210 to 128.

Trouble between students and faculty headed by President Futrell, started several weeks ago, when the faculty governing committee put into effect stringent rules governing student conduct. Students charge the president with "an attitude of domination instead of co-operation."

JAPAN A BULWARK AGAINST BOLSHEVIKI

Dean Walter Williams Tells of Conditions Prevailing in the Orient.

FAVOR A LEAGUE

Tendency in Japan Today Is Toward a Democracy--Political Development.

The Far East favors the League of Nations.

Japan today stands as a bulwark in the East against the tide of Bolshevism.

Relations between the United States and Japan were never more amicable than at present.

There are no real differences arising between the American and Japanese troops in Siberia.

There is a growing democratic sentiment in Japan, which may result in the recasting of the present moderately liberal constitution.

The foregoing, in brief, are some of the conditions in the Far East noted by Dean Walter Williams, who has just returned to Columbia from the Orient. He said today:

"Stories coming from the Far East regarding friction between American and Japanese soldiers in Siberia have little foundation in fact. There have been and doubtless will continue to be, differences as to matters of policy and occasional conflicts between individuals, but that there is any really serious disagreements between the soldiers of Japan and those of the United States stationed at Vladivostok and other points in Siberia are based on a misapprehension of the situation. There has been actual and thorough co-operation between the representatives of the two countries in Siberia.

"The very suggestion that any difficulty arises between Japan and the United States over the question of race discrimination and our economic and financial interests in the Orient is regarded as highly improbable by residents of Japan. The official relations between the two governments have never been more cordial than at present. Japan stands as a bulwark in the East against the tide of Bolshevism which is threatening. She seeks the friendship and support of the United States in every possible way. No visitor to Japan can fail to be impressed with the remarkable deference to American opinion and to the almost phenomenal growth of democracy in Japan. It must be remembered that in Japan when one speaks of Japan or of China that he must generalize regarding great nations that are divided into groups, classes and political parties holding as diverse opinions as groups, classes, and parties would hold in the United States. Japan and China, like the United States, have their national security leagues and defense societies seeking to divert patriotism into national jingoism. This element exaggerates differences for political and economic reasons. Fortunately for the peace of the world it is much less powerful in Japan than it has been in the past.

Tendency Toward Democracy.

"There is a liberal progressive democratic sentiment increasing in Japan that threatens not merely the overthrow of the present moderately liberal government, but a recasting of the nation's constitution. One illustration shows the growth of this sentiment. Public meetings have been held, attended by thousands, to adopt measures urging the abolishing of the property qualification for suffrage. These meetings and the sentiment which they represented have been taken into account by the ministry in power and as a result the government itself will bring about the adoption of a bill reducing by one-half the property tax which the individual must have paid before he could exercise the right of suffrage. The adoption of this bill enlarges greatly the electorate in Japan, and tends thus far to a more democratic nation. Its adoption, however, does not stop the agitation for an entire abolition of the property tax qualification for voting, and unless the keenest political observers in Japan are deceived as to the future, that nation, within a decade will have no other qualification for suffrage than age qualification.

Japan and China.

"Relations between China and Japan provoke much discussion in the newspapers of the Far East and many leaders in these two great Oriental nations. Japan is accused, and apparently with justice, of seeking within the recent past, to increase her political and economic hold upon China. This is resented, and properly so, by a growing number of more liberal elements in China as well as by a large and increasing number of Japanese. It is a reminder of the old policy 'that those should take who had the power, and those should keep who can.'

"While the world's back was turned toward the Far East, Japan pressed demands upon China, some of which were granted, by corrupt or cowardly officials temporarily in charge of Chinese affairs. Morphine and opium were smuggled into China with the tacit consent, if not the connivance, of a group of Japanese. Military leaders in China invited Japanese support and accepted financial aid.

"But Japan wake up, however, to the fact that what Great Britain had done in the opium trade, and what France, Germany, and Great Britain and other nations had done in obtaining concessions for territories and trade by peculiar methods in the past was not permissible under the conditions in the new world; hence the changed opinion in Japan which threatens the overthrow or even the practical statesman, and which has brought about the publication of some curious secret treaties. Japan's policy in regard to China is the policy of other nations in the past. Japan has merely been caught with the goods on her person after the sun has risen.

For a League of Nations.

"Official and public opinion in the Far East is overwhelming for the League of Nations. China regards it enthusiastically as a guarantee for her peaceful, independent, national development. Japan looks with favor, but with somewhat less enthusiasm, upon the proposed League. If it will assure Japan's position as a first class power, then all right. If it brings about such a reduction of armaments as would reduce Japan to the rank of a second or third rate nation, then that's another matter. It is this latter possibility in the League's covenant that makes certain Japanese, whose faith is in the shining sword, hesitate to give their fullest approval to the suggested covenant of nations."
